Learning Intention: establish a clear understanding of how character flaws create a story's problem

S.D. #71

By Barbara Bottner

Before Reading

Learning Outcomes: A2, A3, A5, A6, A9, B5,

Tell students that stories almost always contain a problem and a solution. Ask students to use the picture and title to predict what the problem might be in this story. Ask students to turn and talk about connections they may have to this title.

Explain that the learning intention for this lesson is to carefully examine character flaws and how flaws can create a problem in a story. The link between problem and solution must be clear before students write stories of their own.

During Reading

Learning Outcomes: B6, B11

As the story is read, ask students to listen carefully for a character flaw. Pause while reading this book and ask students to predict how the author may solve this issue. Discussions like this allow students to see that there are many ways to solve problems and fuel them with ideas for their own stories. (Please see other suggested titles and BLMs)

After Reading

Learning Outcomes: B7, B11, C4, C5, C6, C9,

After listening to Miss Brooks Loves Books (and I Don't), ask students to use the following graphic organizers to create a list of character flaws. Gather some of the books in the charts (pages 4 and 5 of this document) and as students read these examples, they will continue to fill in the chart. When the chart is complete, have students choose a few of the character flaws that they would like to use as a basis for their own story.
